

INTERCULTURAL COMPETENCIES

We believe that globally prepared students have the capacity and disposition to understand and act on issues of global significance. They will develop and exhibit a range of intercultural competencies that demonstrate that they are:

An inquirer – with the ability to think critically, problem solve and show leadership around current issues of global significance relating to geopolitics, the environment, health, trade, sustainable development and human rights.

Open minded and adaptable – valuing multiple perspectives, with self-awareness around identity and culture.

A good communicator – who selects and applies appropriate tools and strategies to communicate and collaborate effectively with others.

Courageous – can demonstrate leadership and resilience in order to effect positive change.

An equaliser – who makes ethical decisions, advocates for social justice, and shows respect, empathy and humility.

A sustainability advocate – who translates ideas, concerns, and findings into appropriate and responsible individual or collaborative actions to improve conditions for their own community and the wider world.

Fluent in 21st century digital technology – in order to improve communication and collective wellbeing.
