

Boys, Girls, Brains & Behaviour

Stereotypes about boys and girls have been around for centuries. Yet parents and teachers have been encouraged to challenge these gender stereotypes - "Kids can be anything they want!"

Despite the supposed gender revolution, boys and girls really do seem to be different. They relate to others differently, develop differently, play differently, receive diagnoses differently, experience mental health challenges differently, and more.

In this no-nonsense, science-based presentation, Dr Justin Coulson unpacks brain, behaviour, and gender myths, truths, and rumours to help parents and teachers work with kids to uncover their strengths, build their motivation, and maximise their resilience and wellbeing.
